The History of EARLY AMERICAN ROCK CRYSTAL Glassware

BACK in the sixteenth century, Rudolph II ruled over the destinies of the artistic, carefree, but progressive people of Bohemia. Rudolph was, himself, imbued with the fine cultural understanding of the famous artisans among his people, who were later to give the world many of its cultural traditions.

It was at this time that the art of glass blowing and cutting began to interest the eager progressive people of Bohemia. Rudolph, not the least impressed by the magic of glass, called together his finest artisans and instructed them to produce the most beautiful sparkling glass tableware in the world to grace his kingly tables.

Thus, the first designs were conceived, and the first hand cuttings made of the now famous Rock Crystal. The monarch had kingly reason to be proud of the handiwork of his craftsmen for as the centuries passed this masterly design found its way to America where American craftsmen improved the pattern adding new lustre and beauty.

At the beginning of the twentieth century, the idea came to the McKee Glass Company to produce Rock Crystal in a moulded glass. The faithful reproduction is both charming and distinctive, appealing to the most discriminating lover of perfect table settings.

Rightly named EARLY AMERICAN ROCK CRYSTAL, this popular tableware has steadily gained in popularity — a bit of distinctive old world charm of early Bohemian origin.
